“The September series between the White Sox and the Twins should be one of the best of the year,” said Conrad “Connie” Kowal, Executive Director of the Chicago Baseball Museum. “And for each ticket the CBM sells, it helps us with our fundraising efforts. This game will be special and the atmosphere electric, so I’m sure our CBM fans will be ready to rock cheering on the White Sox.”

The Chicago Baseball Museum & Jerome Holtzman Library, a 501(c)3 organization, is in fundraising efforts to help its development and its search for a potential location. The centerpiece for the future Museum will be the Jerome Holtzman Library and Research Center. The Museum acquired Mr. Holtzman’s entire collection of books, notes, interviews and research information of the late, great Chicago baseball sportswriter, who invented the “save” statistic, and was the only official historian of Major League Baseball.

The CBM Night with the White Sox is another in a series of events hosted this year including the recent “Andre Dawson Tribute with the Schaumburg Flyers, the “All-Star Viewing Party with Chicago baseball authors”, the CBM Night with the Cubs, and the tribute luncheon on April 6 for Hall of Fame pitcher Bob Feller commemorating the 70th Anniversary of his historic Opening Day no-hitter at Chicago’s old Comiskey Park on April 16, 1940. Other projects/efforts of the Chicago Baseball Museum include assistance in the Jack Brickhouse Statue Rededication efforts, the production of a TV Documentary "Buck O'Neil and Black Baseball in Chicago", published articles promoting the innocence of "Shoeless" Joe Jackson, and baseball re-instatement of Buck Weaver, the establishment of the Jerome Holtzman Award at the Annual Chicago Pitch & Hit Club Awards Banquet, and other topical, historical and relevant events for fans of Chicago baseball history.
